Senegal Leads African World Cup Euphoria

Dakar (Reuters) – Senegal led Africa in a massive whoop of joy on Sunday as its team beat Sweden to become only the second from the continent ever to reach the quarter-finals of the World Cup.

The Streets of the capital Dakar were lost under a wave of red, gold and green national colours that topped even the party after Senegal beat reigning champions and former colonial power France in the tournament's opening match. Some held high the pictures of marabouts – spiritual leaders in the local brand of Islam – thanked for Henri Camara's golden goal in extra time that secured the 2-1 victory over a team that finished top of the toughest first-round group.

"My marabout called me at five-o'clock this morning to go out and prepare the banners because Senegal is going to win the match," said student Bockar Seck. Daniel Dabo, a fellow student from the southern Casamance province where Christians and animists have fought a long separatist war, said: "I went to make offerings for Senegal and killed a chicken. God has respected my wishes."

Cars crammed with more supporters and flags than seemed possible hooted in celebration and chased wandering sheep from the roads of dusty suburbs as they jostled towards the jammed traffic at the heart of the city.

Senegal's victory over Sweden showed it was not just luck that took them through the first round of the World Cup Finals, President Abdoulaye Wade has said. "Until now people were asking if it was not just luck." Wade told reporters. "It was the art of football they showed today. We are now one of the great teams of the world."

But the celebration stretched across a continent whose other standard bearers fell by the wayside in the first round. "There was a huge shout here after the goal. Everybody is so happy," said Robert Loufimpou, a taxi driver in the Congolese capital Brazzaville, who was among thousands displaced by fighting that left about 100 dead last week. "Senegal's result is great for Africa," he said.

Cameroon, who in 1990 became the first African team to reach the quarter-finals, did not live up to their promise as African champions. A superstar-packed Nigerian side failed to qualify and South Africa and Tunisia were also eliminated. Suddenly Senegal, playing in the World Cup finals for the first time, has become the footballing capital of a soccer-mad continent and the center of hopes that they can now beat either Japan or Turkey to reach the semi-finals.

"People who think Africa cannot win the World Cup may soon eat their words because I see Senegal going all the way. No team can stop them now," said Chuckwudi Okeke, a businessman in Nigeria's business hub Lagos, black Africa's biggest city.
